American Indian tribes of Montana and Wyoming

At present they are largely under the influence of Catholic missionaries of the Coeur d'Alene Mission. But few of them are engaged in farming, the main body relying upon their success in hunting, and upon the supplies furnished by the Government for their support. Individuals belonging to this tribe sometimes entered the southwestern part of Montana.

Tribal Nations

The , Bloods, and Piegan located at the Blackfeet Agency, on the Teton River, about seventy-five miles from Fort Benton , the Gros Ventre, Assinaboine, the River Crows, about 1000 of the Northern Arapahoe and Cheyenne, and the Santee and Yankton Sioux located at the Milk River Agency, on the Milk River, about one hundred miles from its mouth , occupy jointly a reservation in the extreme northern part of the Territory, set apart by treaties not ratified made in 1868 with most of the tribes named, and containing about 17,408,000 acres.

Tribal Nations

The second section contains an A to Z dictionary of tribal articles and biographies of noteworthy Native Americans that have contributed to the history of Wyoming. ## Montana Indian Tribes

Planning Support Group, 1978-10 American Indian tribes of Montana and Wyoming. POINTS OF INTEREST Chief Two Moons Monument This historic monument was built in 1936 in memory of Chief Two Moons, who participated in the Battle of the Little Bighorn. The original homes of the Cree were north of the present United States, though their war parties frequently came into the territory now occupied by this country to fight the Dakota, Blackfoot, and other tribes.

Montana Indian Tribes

Since much of Native American history occurred before statehood, there is a need for information on Native Americans of the region to fully understand the history and culture of the native peoples that occupied Wyoming and the surrounding areas. The Assiniboine and Sioux Indians of the Fort Peck Reservation in northeastern Montana are no exception. The following tribes at one time are recorded in history as having resided within the present state of Montana.

Although they had been at war for years with the Indians properly belonging to the Milk River Agency, yet, by judicious management on the part of the agent of the Government stationed there, and the influence of some of the most powerful chiefs, the former feuds and difficulties were amicably arranged; and all parties have remained friendly to each other during the year past.
