The Urban Advantage in Education

Supporters have stated that contract rights and due process has hampered previous superintendents who have sought in the past to downsize the school administration and remove poorly performing employees.

The “urban advantage” in education

Bjork 2006: 1 points out that a dearth of studies exists focusing on the implementation of educational decentralization policies. For example, Sacken 1988 reviewed studies on parental success rates and found a range of 30% to 60%, depending on the criteria used to determine parental success. Education in Ethiopia

From the name Department of Public Instruction, it became the Department of Education, then the Ministry of Education during the martial law years. For purposes of AYP determinations, the department expanded the LEP subgroup to include students who have passed the state's English language proficiency assessments but have not yet demonstrated proficiency in reading on the MCAs for three years. During the 2003-04 school year, only 5 of Minnesota's 342 school districts 1.
