great modern Livery Company can only be built from a lot of small things done well..."

The Museum of London is the 2nd most visited museum in the UK after the British Museum, yet still some will claim the City is somehow a great secret hidden from sight, its workings mysterious and impenetrable.

Liveryies and the City

But nowhere is there such a concentration, nor can there be any set of private organisations which contribute so much to public life. Another important part of increasing the effectiveness of our funding involves partnerships. Away from the leather trade, we also support the C Company of the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, and more recently, we have adopted the Urswick School in Hackney, building on our connection with the area to support secondary education.

London livery companies

The priests treated the Ark as if it actually contained the body of their God. With growing demands on the Corporation and a corresponding need to raise local taxes from the commoners, the Common Council grew in importance and has been the principal governing body of the City of London since the 18th century. We would like Nurses to be included in this impressive array of professionals.

About the Cooks Company

It is known that in 1692, the Company was, recorded by the Court of Aldermen, as having been in existence since 1356, as Marshalls of the City. A curious characteristic of these theories is the way in which many of them can only fully be revealed to the reader by subscribing to a paid website, buying a book, a DVD or a ticket to attend a conference. The Levant Company was set up to trade further East; the Virginia Company went on from trade to colonisation, with very mixed results, as was the case with the first Irish settlements in Munster; the Muscovy Company developed a monopoly on trade with Russia, and the East India Company received its first charter in 1600.
