The Great Wall Humpty Dumpty is about to take a great fall because he just found out that the two red lines are equal in length. I was talking about something else, that perhaps I understood incorrectly.

Drawing and Perceiving: Real

The power of a Rembrandt, in other words, is inseparable from the fact that it's a Rembrandt. Here's where things get tricky: The mischievous scientists reversed the attribution of the paintings, so that half of the subjects were told that the real Rembrandts were actually copies. And useful, evolutionarily speaking, is far more advantageous than objective.
