Review: C.S.S. Hunley Civil War Submarine

The Hunley then called Fish Boat sank on August 29, 1863, during a test run, killing five members of her crew. While the entire project was a private venture, the Confederate army not the navy, took a keen interest in the contraption and assigned an infantry officer named William Alexander to supervise the work.

What Sank the HL Hunley?

Eight schoolchildren can barely cram themselves into a replica nearby at the Warren Lasch Conservation Centre. McClintock described the boat as follows: In the Spring of 1864 I built the 3d boat, having abandoned the artificial motive power as not attainable in our situations.
