Each person experiences herself not through direct information but only indirectly, with the help of the ability to adopt the other's point of view.

Intersubjective Self Psychology: A Primer

Under the rubric of 'intersubjectivity,' Natterson and Friedman range all those contemporary psychoanalytic perspectives in which therapist and patient are both portrayed as real people having complex conscious and unconscious impact on one another. Marital satisfaction for both partners was tracked with an Index of Marital Satisfaction over the course of the treatment and the follow-up process.
