Calendar reform

After centuries of empirical observations, the theoretical aspects of calendar construction could become more refined, enabling predictions that identified the need for reform. It appears, from the date of insertion of the intercalary month in the Roman republican calendar and the habit of designating years by the names of the consuls, that the calendar year had originally commenced in March, which was the date when the new consul took office. To remove the immense discrepancy between calendar date and equinox, it was decided that the year known in modern times as 46 bce should have two intercalations.

Calendar

It seems that the months of the Julian calendar were taken over from the Roman republican calendar but were slightly modified to provide a more even pattern of numbering. The project was completed in 333.

Calendar

Calendar schisms happen if not all cultures that adopted a common calendar system before perform a calendar reform at the same time.
