There's a vacuum now in British politics. And it's Blair

Ominously for , the polling, to be released on Wednesday before the party conference season, found that while 77% of voters place themselves as somewhere near the political centre centre left, centre or centre right , only 20% believe the Labour leader occupies any of that territory, with 47% regarding as solidly leftwing.

ANALYSIS: 2020 stretched the social fabric of the United Kingdom. 2021 could rip it to pieces

Hobolt, a co-author of a coming book about challenger parties in Europe. The Conservatives won a majority in 2019 by taking a string of Brexit-supporting Labour seats in the north of England.

That weakness was on display in the most recent election, in which the roughly half of the electorate who oppose leaving the European Union found that their votes had only a fraction of the power that votes for the pro-Brexit Conservatives did. The province, which is part of the UK, shares a land border with the Republic of Ireland, which is in the European Union. Neither option is attractive, since the only effective way to counter the SNP is to fight on their terms.

But also because of all the things that led to Brexit. It provided the coal that powered the nation, whereas the warehouse just stores mostly polyester tracksuits that get shipped around the country. Johnson made support for Brexit by any means necessary a litmus test for Conservative politicians, going so far as to expel 21 legislators for voting to block a no-deal Brexit.
