Gendered Implications of Tax Reform in Latin America: Argentine, Chile, Costa Rica and Jamaica

The most effective means for reducing class- and gender-based inequality are citizenship-based entitlements to basic income support, healthcare and education. My most recent ones were published recently. As a result, treaty networks and the full participation exemption available in many European countries will remain relevant for international groups in Latin America.

This incentive takes effect on 1 January 2020 and will apply until 31 December 2029. The Chilean tax authority has issued instructions to prevent treaty shopping through the use of conduit companies.

Governance, Taxes and Tax Reform in Latin America

In much of Latin America, rules around withholding taxes on B2B transactions vary so greatly it can dramatically hinder efficient business.
