Notes: Many adults passed through childhood with a lot of fears about the unknown. Little did many of us realize that the “something terrible” harming us as children would more likely be a trusted individual. . .someone known to be sleeping in the family home, rather than crawling out from under a bed. . .not a shark rising out of water, but more likely a human predator taking advantage of children in bathing suits. . .a trusted caretaker transporting children in a family car rather than an ugly creature accompanied by special effects. Many of us couldn’t have guessed that children had a much greater chance of being harmed by the living, and not the dead. How many of us knew that people who did bad things would more likely look like this...
