Learning resources launched for nurses new to critical care

Students with unmet health, hunger, and hygiene needs are identified by school district faculty and staff. As you complete these, you will learn about ways to integrate strengths-based practices and attitudes into your work with families and children; form mutually respectful, goal-oriented relationships with parents that strengthen children's school readiness and family well-being; create safe and welcoming environments for families; examine your own perspectives about family engagement; and affirm the importance of families, cultures, languages, strengths, and interests. .

Learning resources launched for nurses new to critical care

Find out about effective practices in partnering with families to support children's healthy development and learning. This model allows each Care to Learn Chapter to meet the unique needs of local students in their partner school district. Family engagement is an interactive process that brings early childhood professionals, family members, and their children together to build positive and goal-oriented relationships.
