. There are also limitations to what a biography can provide to enhance a reading, such as the question of what is relevant and what is irrelevant and how to make a judgement on this, as well as issues of false or inaccurate biographical information.

Sean Burke, The Death and Return of the Author: Criticism and Subjectivity in Barthes, Foucault and Derrida

In this now classic study, Seán Burke both provides the first detailed explanation of anti-authorialism and shows how, even taken on its own terms, the attempt to abolish the author is philosophically untenable. Important additions to the new edition include: a section challenging Derrida's reading of Plato as the founder of logocentrism; an epilogue which deals with the politics of authorship and issues of technology; and a fully updated bibliography. Prompted by the responses to the passing of Jacques Derrida in 2004, he revisits the enigmatic borderlines between life and work, life and authorial death.
