It entered the Louvre Museum in 1814. Delacroix did not take part in another revolution in Paris. Two of them — Archangel Michael with a sword and St.

Louvre Museum Masterpieces: 20 Must See Artworks

It must be mentioned that this is not true and in fact, there is little resemblance of Sardanapalus to any known Assyrian king. Although you will have to fight through an army of selfie stick carriers to even get a glimpse of it, who could conceive visiting the Louvre without seeing the most famous painting in the world? Take a moment to enter the mind of an observer in the 16th century as life was so very different. This brings us to the number one and greatest painting in the Louvre by my humble opinion.

17 Most Famous Paintings in the Louvre Museum, Paris

The true story behind this picture, nobody really knows, but one of the theories says that the work was commissioned by a very wealthy silk merchant who lived in Florence, named Francesco del Giocondo, a widower twice, he would have married in 1495 to a young woman named Lisa. They eventually became part of the French national collection in 1793.
