Formative work on masculinity in film and cultural studies has sought both to establish the patterns involved in cinematic representation of men usually adult men, and often with classical Hollywood cinema as the area of study and also to disentangle cultural categories of masculinity and femininity from biological categories of male and female. This volume lays the groundwork for men and women -- straight, gay, or lesbian -- to better understand the complex and shifting category of masculinity in both film and everyday life. With the representation of violence informed by and a co-determinant of gender categories, masculinity figures strongly in most essays in the collection.
