Linwood was over 300 miles 480 km away from Ryton, but the engine castings made in Linwood had to be sent to Ryton to be machined and assembled, then sent back up to be put on the cars — a 600-mile 970 km round trip. Folder 58,8x62,9cm; folded 3x: 29,9x21,1cm Dutch Code R 6649 D two versions exist, one by HAU without a code, but nearly the same info. Its production ceased at the same time as the Californian: April 1970.

Hillman

Topspeed is unchanged from the saloon model, even though the windtunnel showed a bit more resistance than the saloon.

Hillman Imp 1963

Michael Parks Project Engineer — who later went on to work for the Ferrari F1 team and Tim Fry Co-ordinating Engineer were charged with getting the project off the ground, and were given a clean sheet of paper to work with.

Hillman Imp

Rootes had to build a new, computerised assembly plant on the outskirts of Glasgow, in the town of Linwood, in which to assemble the Imp, since planning regulations had prevented it from expanding its Ryton plant near Coventry.
