Gelon

The last secondary colony to be launched on Sicilian soil was the town of Akragas Latin Agrigentum on the South coast in 580 BC, which turned out to become one of the wealthiest and most powerful cities in the Greek world. So far is clear that the Carthaginians lacked siege weapons and hoped on Himera giving up because it ran out of food supplies. Gelon's spies had reported these plans to him early enough to reject the request of the Hellenic League and he duly assembled his forces to make ready for war.

From there they marched eastwards to lay siege on Himera in the summer of 480 BC. His reputation made him a perfect pick for the tyrant Gelon to rule over the notoriously problematic town of Kamarina on the South coast. Lupus, Bernhard, Die Stadt Syrakus im Alterthum, Straßburg 1885.
