1637

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth, Stol'n on his wing my three and twentieth year! To bear me where the tow'rs of Salem stood. Milton here creates the genealogy of Melancholy as he has done for Mirth in the previous poem.

In the next chapter, we shall see for ourselves the extent to which modern elegists have sought a balance between the repudiation and persistence of elegy; and how they have often confronted the desolation and rage that accompany grief. The Countess' first husband had been married twice prior to his marriage to her, and her second husband had been married once before ; their children had intermarried, and at the date of this masque she at seventy had numerous children and grandchildren. Some critics think this should be accented on the first syllable, but Masson prefers the usual pronunciation of the word.

English poetry was dominated by critically respected and commercially successful poets like Alfred Noyes, Henry Newbolt and William Watson. The poem therefore offers a mimesis 89 90 female elegists and feminist readers of delusions of reference that adds to a wider sense of secrets being simultaneously revealed and withdrawn.

Lycidas 1637 1645

The passage exemplifies how scepticism about figuration becomes a figure.

Other elegies for Forbes by Ken Bolton, Peter Porter, John Tranter and Chris Burns focus on the quality of his attention to the world. Milton first published the masque in the edition of 1645, with this title-page : A Masque of the Same Author, presented at Ludlow Castle, 1634, before the Earl of Bridgewater, then President of Wales : Anno Dom. What chance, good Lady, hath bereft you thus? In uncompassionate anger do not so.
