The Sinking Island is not the place to begin appreciating Kenner and, with him, literature.

Five Pacific islands lost to rising seas as climate change hits

Conrad was starting out, and the three giants were under conversion--Hardy from novels to poetry, James into his monumental last period, and Yeats from misty and ornate to rock-hard though still pretty ornate.

Please inquire for more detailed condition information. While they were laying the international foundations of literary modernism, another modernism far more specifically American was being born in the work of William Faulkner, Wallace Stevens, William Carlos Williams, Marianne Moore, Ernest Hemingway, and F. Now, it is cloudy all the time, and the coral is dead.

The Unsceptered Isle of English Literature : A SINKING ISLAND The Modern English Writers by Hugh Kenner (Alfred A. Knopf: $22.95; 290 pp.)

Very good in very good dustwrapper. Kenner notes that Joyce, Conrad and Virginia Woolf all submitted material to Tit-Bits and were all turned down. Naturally, it includes a number of his bang-on insights, while focusing on a few writers that surprise.
